

Nationwide 9/11 Call for Freedom From Fear

In the grief and fear that gripped the nation after September 11, 2001, the U.S. invested in war, retribution, and preemptive violence. Five years later, the country is still in the grip of fear, the U.S. is more isolated than ever before, and military action has not resulted in greater security. It's time to reevaluate our post-9/11 choices, reject policies based on fear, and invest in building the world we want.

On this fifth anniversary of 9/11, join thousands nationwide asking Congress to:

- End the war in Iraq and support internationally led reconstruction efforts;
- Prevent the next wars now with expanded funding for international development and diplomacy;
- Stop the erosion of our constitutional rights in the name of "security."

TAKE ACTION TODAY to build a better response to insecurity and a better future for our nation:

- visit www.fcnl.org/911call to write your members of Congress on Monday, September 11 with a coordinated call for change in U.S. policy;
- Ask three friends, family members, or colleagues to join you in calling on Congress to make real investments in building the world we want—not the world we fear;
- Make a pledge to visit one of your elected representatives before the November elections to share your views.

In response to 9/11, the U.S. invested in war—and got what it paid for. Five years after 9/11 it's time to invest in sensible tools for peace.
